OTOR OIL

Look back upon a memory, at a glance of yesteryear
Behold the simple realities of which we always hear,
Stand back and look at life, I plead, my quest is but a game
I only want the answer of, "Is now not like the same?"

"Those days of old . . ." I'm always told, I wish I had them back
The present doesn't seem to have the luster — just the lack,
I long for times when carefree winds would whirl upon my mind
But tomorrow's voice awakens me to the pattern I must find.

So I say goodbye to worlds forgone, to dreams that I once dreamed
And accept my role in the present, with growing in between,
And the wisdom that I acquire will help me end the game
Of finding the sole answer of, "Is now not like the same?"

BOB KILBERG

We think that now, being older
we are different.
We think that
the world, being older,
must have changed . . .

. . . But take a close look at the past and one may find that the present resembles it considerably, only shaded to a different need.

At one point
we were explorers reaching for goals just beyond our grasp . . .

Searching for a much needed friend . . .

Accepting a challenge of immense responsibility

. . . and to a degree finally achieving them.

. . . only to find him
when you thought all was lost.

. . . only to find the challenge
incessant,
more demanding,
more realistic as the years grow old.

Therefore we are explorers
even today . . .

Caught in a montage
of roles and guises . . .

. . . That we pretend never to have experienced before.

But what appears to be may not be what really is.

Is not our life now,
just a parallel
of the past
. . . a release
of concepts, impressions and desires that were held back for so long.
Are we not an extension of the person we desperately try to conceal,
for fear of seeing ourselves as we really are.

Yet if one finds solitude in a dream, then his escape is secure.
For from a dream comes the pretensions of a new life and a new world, of a world that is changed and a life that is improved.

And who is to say who is right:
the realist or

The dreamer.

Sometimes a dream. . .

. . . is more of a reality than life itself. And if that dream is never crushed,
if that concealment
is never withdrawn,
then the person has won a victory, even if it is only for himself.

For the rest of us then,
the pattern will eventually emerge.

And though we linger in our shades of new identities
and commitments,
we realize the time
will come . . .

. . . Slowly we will slip back, to the person of old, to the life of old,
To the world
as it was;

more mature, more experienced, but nonetheless
the same.

NIXON
HOME
BOXES

But the Knowledge that we take with us is the Knowledge that others have shared our truth.
And we realize that never again will we be alone or afraid of this world of transient realities.

I followed an impulse to act out a role . . . to extend myself in the playground of artistic release . . . to see if I could succeed in putting myself in the form of another . . . to see if I would reach my limit . . . I succeeded. But how can I be the same person?

I followed an impulse to act out of character . . . to extend myself in the playground of artistic release . . . to see if I could succeed in relinquishing myself to the will of the other . . . to see if I would reach my limit . . . I succeeded. But how can I be the same person?

Dr. Floyd Watkins
English Department

When did you come to Emory?

I came in 1949.

What would you consider to be the greatest change since then?

Emory has become much more cosmopolitan; the students and faculty are much less southern. Also — and it may be because of my age — it seems that the relationship between students and faculty has changed considerably. Students don't come to see me as often — I don't see them coming to see the younger professors as often either. One of my students said it may be because the younger generation is locked in, and I think he may be right.

What other differences have you noticed in the students?

Students are much better educated when they get here. They are far more sophisticated as well. I like a lot of students — but as far as the whole student body goes, I don't believe I like them as well. They speak to you less on campus.

What about changes in the role of the university?

The faculty is more cosmopolitan. There were too many demands on the professor when I came here, and too little independence. The students wanted more work or tutoring. Teaching loads have changed incredibly, too. Physically — it's amazing how the campus has changed. I don't believe construction has stopped since 1946.

Is it more academic now?

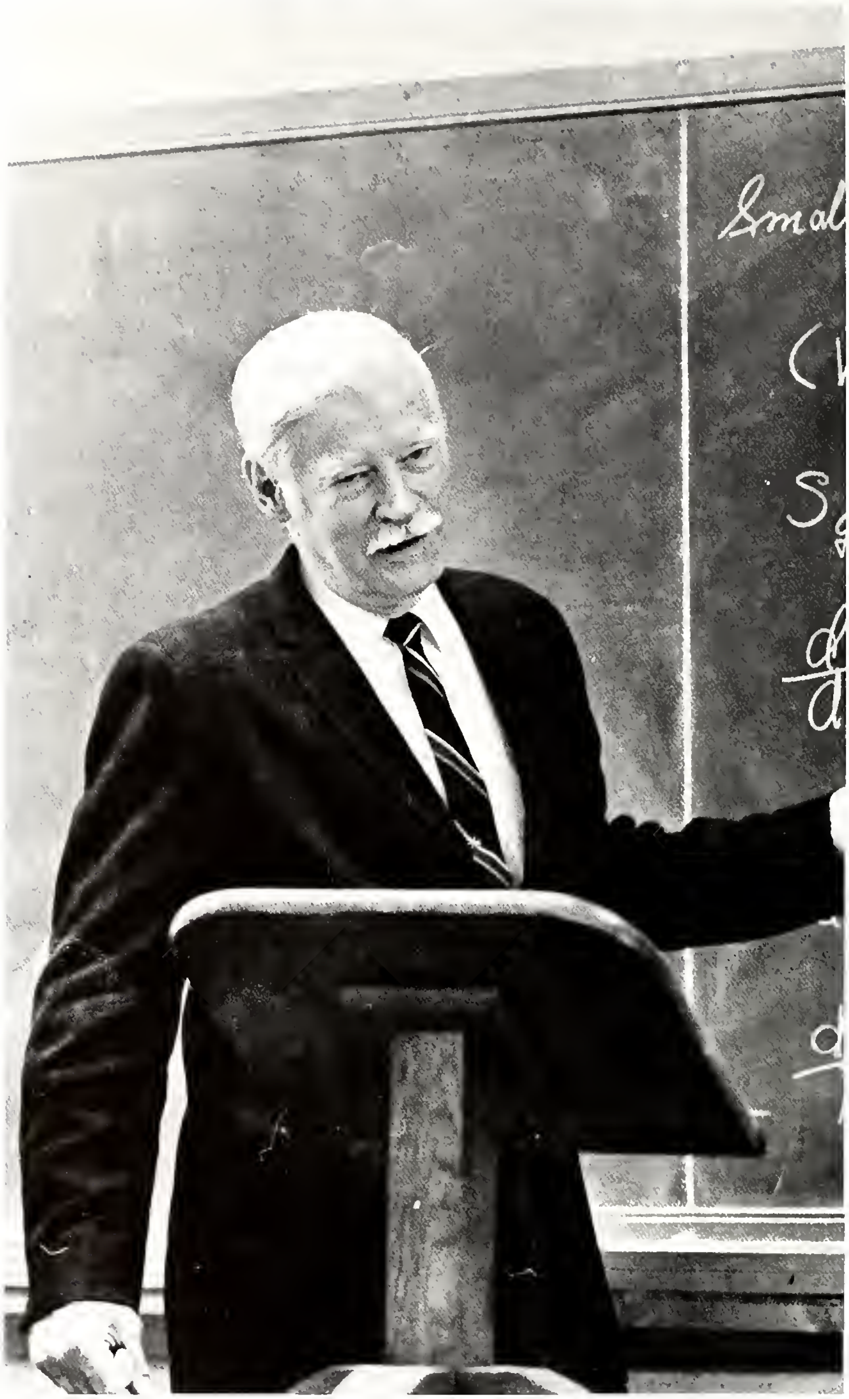
The veterans of World War II were eager to learn. They were the most eager students I have ever taught.

Has the change been gradual?

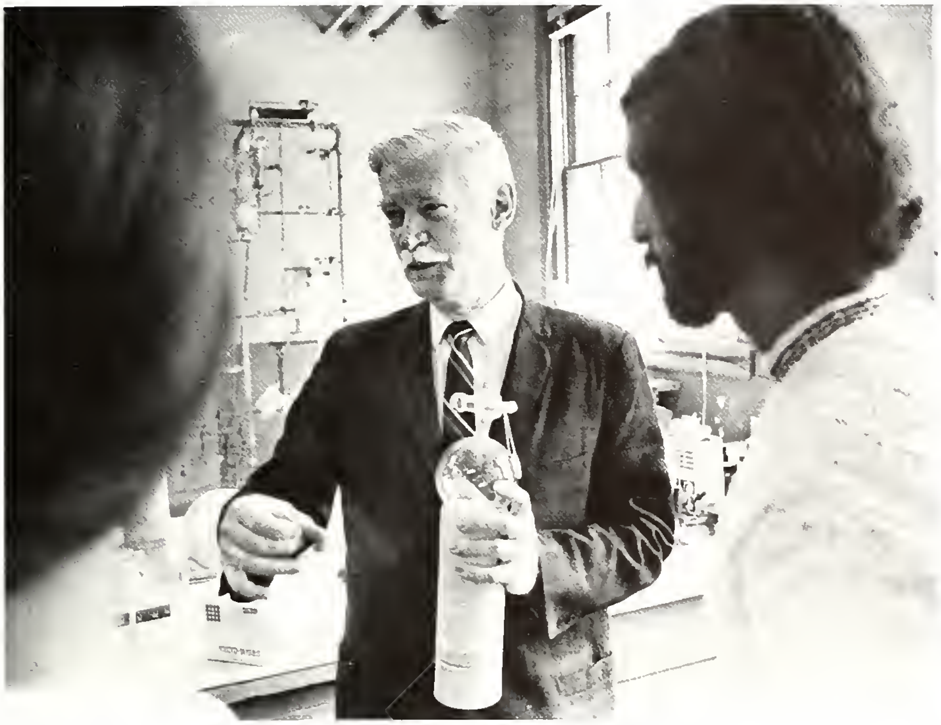
It goes on all the time. Classes and departments have personalities. These change every couple of years. The change to cosmopolitan came with the policy in admissions in the 60's. In the late 60's, Emory tried to get away from provincialism, tried to be national rather than provincial. In some ways, I think this was a mistake.

How do you feel about Emory now?

Lots of educational institutions are characterized by professors with no loyalty to their particular institutions — they are pretty much rootless. This is my institution.



Dr. William Jones
Chemistry Department



How long have you been at Emory?

I began teaching here as an instructor in 1927. Many youngsters start doing just part time. I started full time from the first.

I imagine you have seen Emory change quite a lot?

It has been interesting to see the campus change. I was a freshman in the second freshman class taken in by Emory, in 1920. It was literally out in the woods then.

How would you describe the way Emory has changed?

Bigness. We had a small, close-knit situation — almost pioneering. There was a closeness in spirit — it was pretty rugged. The nearest grocery store was at Five Points; you had to slog through the mud to get to the pavement. It was a rugged, pioneering situation — and a spirit of everybody concerned about everybody — this was a necessity.

I don't think the student body was any more marvelous — they weren't any supermen — they had feet of clay — less advantages. There was not as good a cross-section as there is now. There was this marvelous spirit.

Do you think the change is for the better or worse?

Well, it is better — bigness brings its problems, and we'd be well advised to acknowledge and offset them. It is better now. Those days are not something we'd like to turn the clock back to.

How has the role of the university changed?

Greeks have lost ground. In my day fraternities were too strong — 85% of the males. It was at the point that if a fellow didn't join you almost had to ask what was wrong with him. There has been some attrition of power of the row and that is good. Yet, I would not like to see it swept away.

Dr. Dennis Ippolito
Political Science Department

You came to Emory in 1968?

Yes, that's exactly right.

Have you noticed any ways in which the character of Emory University has changed since then?

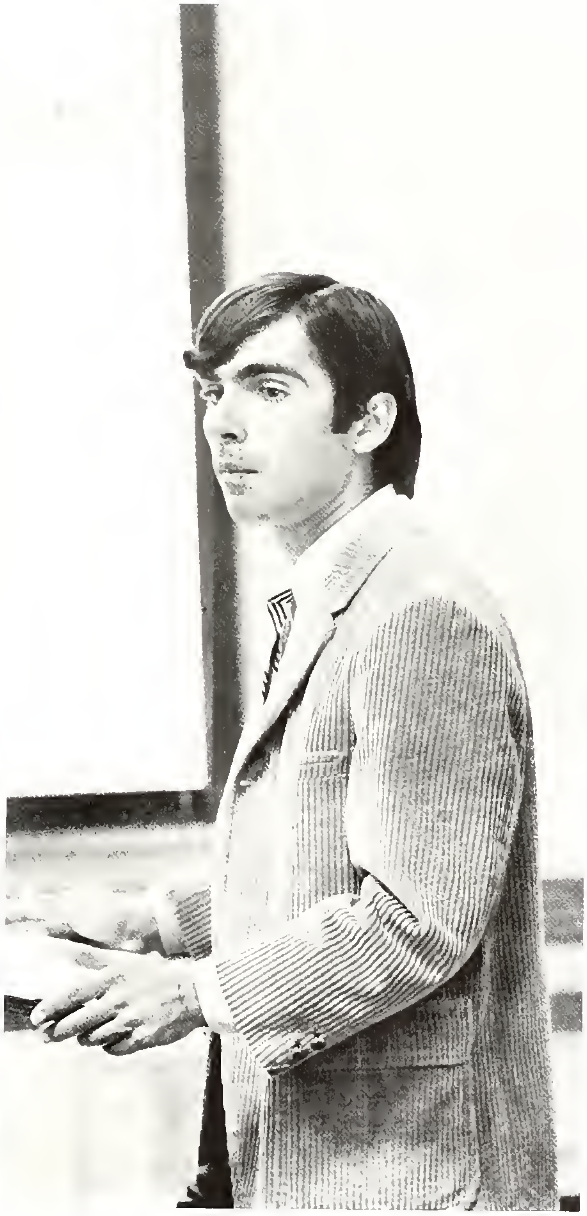
I really haven't seen any serious changes at all. About 1970, there was a little flurry of political activity, but not since.

How about the type student body?

The students are about the same — most are intelligent and easy to deal with. They seem fairly interested, at least in the courses I teach. I don't think they've changed in terms of what they are.

In general, then?

In terms of the general character, Emory University has changed, in as much as the rest of the country has changed. The context is different — nothing terribly significant at Emory.



Mr. Bill Young
Photographic Services

PHOTOGRAPHER ON ASSIGNMENT

I understand you left Emory and came back. Is that right?

Yes. I graduated in 1954, and returned in 1966.

What was the biggest change you found when you returned?

There were lots of girls on campus. My class was the first freshman class in the college to have a girl in it, but the impact of the coeds did not come until later on.

Were they any other differences — the type of students you found?

When I was here the last of World War II, GI's were going through. Most of them were either married or working, or both. The other big group of students on campus then was the Greeks on fraternity row; there were practically no independents. Nothing compared to today, with the big bunch of independents.

The make-up of the student body has changed radically. When I went to school here the majority were middle-class Southern white Protestants. Today there is a higher rate of non-Southerners.

What about the kind of university Emory was?

We were well aware of the church orientedness of the university. We were also aware of the split between lower and upper divisions, which is not so evident now. I don't think the kids are as class oriented anyway. The GI'S wanted to get out fast; the Greeks were very social — Dooley's was a really big thing.

What about between 1966 and today — have there been any noticeable changes?

Superficially — people around the campus speak to each other now. Even a year ago, everybody was afraid about getting in an argument. I think the change became visible the weekend of the winter agression rally last year.

The war has become cockamamie. No one bothers to argue anymore. You could watch real concern slope off after Kent State. We've gone back to being friendly again.

I'm not knocking the 50's. People were not a bunch of automatons — they were much more adult than they are today. They had been through World War II, and the Depression before that. They were tough people then.

The good ole days are good ole younger days for me. What kids today call "cool" must be making them happy, so I'm all for it. I don't want to make value judgements. If you're young, these are your good times. I'm happy these kids don't have to work, and have time for fun — this is your last freedom. The greatest single thing on this campus is the kids.

Emory University Student Government Association

A HISTORY of Emory University at this time is necessarily brief. Inasmuch as this is the first year in which all of the schools have been located on the same campus, a unified spirit is just now being manifest.

The University was founded in 1914. In September of this year the School of Theology was formally opened. The Atlanta Medical College was made, in May, 1915, the School of Medicine of Emory University. The first session of the Lamar School of Law began September 25, 1916. In February, 1919, by authority of the Board of Trustees a Graduate School and a School of Economics and Business Administration were organized. In the fall of 1919 the School of Liberal Arts was removed from Oxford, and the total enrollment for the University approximated 650 men. The past six years have been full of distractions to the college man. The war called, and the record of service shows how Emory responded. Naturally, the work of organization was delayed on this account.

This has been a crucial year, one full of disappointments and some triumphs, but it is a formative period necessary in the life of a great University. We have caught a vision of the Emory that is to be, and the men are inspired with the determination to strive onward and upward to better things.

Organized in November to meet what was called "a definite gap in services provided by the local community," the Emory Crisis Center nightly goes about the business of helping Emory students and others understand and cope with big or little problems which occur every day. Operating as a telephone counselling service from 7 PM to 7 AM, the Crisis Center provides referals for pregnancy, VD, psychological counselling, medical referrals, drug information, and tutor referrals as well as acting as an ear for those with problems or for those who "just want to rap."

The Barkley Forum

Bruce Albrecht — President

Glenn Pelham has been director of forensics at Emory since 1960. During the past decade Pelham has transformed the Barkley Forum from a weak, loosely organized activity to a strong, nationally recognized forensics program. Emory's debators, under the supervision and training of Pelham, have competed in the last seven national tournaments.

In addition, Pelham has created the Peachtree Tournament, which is now recognized as one of the top collegiate tournaments in the nation. Before coming to Emory, Pelham was chairman of the Department of English at Cairo High School in Cairo, Georgia. After teaching at Cairo, he served three terms in the Georgia State Senate.

The Coca-Cola School

We're not allowed a football team
That will break thru Georgia's line;
With all the baseball bull we fling
We'll never beat Tech's nine;
But our poker teams are winners,
Defeat we never fear.
So buy your lot and hike the pot;
We need your money here.

CHORUS:

Emory, Emory, thy future we foretell.
We were raised on Coca-Cola
So no wonder we raise hell.
When e'er we meet Tech's engineers,
We drink them off their stool.
So fill your cup, here's to the luck
Of the Coca-Cola School.

We cannot pull off gay soirees
We never fling a dance
And, as to all those spicy shows
We haven't got a chance.
But when it comes to slinging "bull"
I guess we hold our ground,
For if "bull" were only water
This would be a seaport town.

Graduate Schools. What is a graduate student? What does one do when one is a graduate student? College of Arts and Sciences . . . failure to face the world just yet, or something more profound — education and the future . . . Business . . . the creditors and the debtors, and the next economy . . . Law . . . speaking profoundly, in the courtroom, long hair and prolific statements about the rights of men and women . . . Medical . . . curing the health problems of the world . . . Dental . . . fixing all those teeth . . . Nursing . . . tomorrow's Florence Nightingales in wire rims and sandels . . . Theology . . . searching for order; chaos and ghettos.

". . . out of evangelical zeal and Methodist piety was minted a social passion which bespoke a toughness and moral fiber distinctly pauline, devoid of sentimentalism or display. In him was a social passion matched by personal generosity. Yet few know just how magnanimous was his spirit, a heart so generous that it provided support and help for countless numbers of students through the years . . ."

OUR 60th YEAR OF OPERATION

Diamonds May Weigh Alike, But . . .

But that does not mean they are alike. Finer color, cutting, and clarity can make one much more valuable.

In this our Diamond Anniversary (yes, a diamond celebrates 60 years as well as 75) we want you to know that all laboratories are not identical and that our ability, service, and cooperation make it possible for us to produce the finest in laboratory prosthetics.

Let us show you how we can work for you.

Get wisdom — 'tis a precious thing;
Wide knowledge to the classroom bring.
But use that wealth of mind and skill
For what is more important still —

To teach young hearts and eager minds
That virtue is the chain that binds
Man to man; that high thoughts, right acts
Are more important than cold facts;

That true success lies not in gain;
That selfish greed the soul doth chain;
That each must live his little span
In service to his fellow-man.

So be the subject what it may
In quiet, unobtrusive way
One lesson teach by word and deed —
That character is life's deep need.

For superior teaching in Emory College
An encouragement and reward for fostering participation,

for providing a model for teaching and scholarship,

Editors Epitaph:

Yes, Virginia, there is a yearbook at Emory . . .

Having a fall-delivery yearbook sometimes causes a loss of enthusiasm, however, in spite of the problems involved (such as people leaving for summer vacation with their sections far from finished), I feel that the yearbook should cover the entire school year, picturing the things that make that year unique and memorable.

College constitutes a brief though eventful period of life. Each individual's memories of a year at Emory are numerous, varied, and elusive — but the 1972 Campus has tried to capture the essence of these memories within its 272 pages.

Emory's reputation is that of a first-rate university, and as such, I feel the yearbook should represent all of the various graduate schools without excluding the importance of Emory College. For this reason, well over one-third of the book focuses on faces and events which are unique to the graduate departments.

In college, we learn from those who hold positions of leadership and authority. Working with people can be rough. I've been disappointed by many people this year, including some of my own staff, that I thought I could rely on. Yet in a pinch, I always found another who would take on the task. Though there isn't enough space to thank them all, I really do need to with some of those who's contributions were outstanding. Thank you: Don, Bud, Elaine, Bill & Red & Sammie, Cheryl, Norman, John & Bill. Then there is always the few staff members who stuck it out until the end. To those few I am forever indebted and extremely grateful.

The 1972 Campus comes to a close . . . and so does a period in the life of many of today's students who are now tomorrow's adults. Thus will that precious period of youth be lost forever to treasured memories; and this then is the sole purpose for the existance of the 1972 Campus.

In Memorium

And in the end, when we allow ourselves to either acknowledge the pattern in our life or cling fast to the grandeur that we really have changed,
The outcome may still be
the same.

For if we do not see the pattern, we cannot benefit from it.
One may turn to acting only on impulses
rather than logic or a safe mixture of both.

Yet if we see the pattern,
we must not stop here.
If one consigns oneself dizzily to it, then he is no better then the person who does not see the pattern at all.
But if one understands what he sees and learns from his past mistakes, that person has grown;
secure in his identity.
more peaceful in his composure, and never again afraid of this world of transient realities.
